My PhD was centered on the political economy of social exclusion, with case studies from Tunisia, Tanzania, and Denmark. I am an applied microeconometrician and have worked with Danish register data, collected my own survey data, web-scraped and analyzed text data. As a post-doc, I study the social and economic integration of refugees in Denmark, including interdisciplinary approaches with political scientists and psychologists. In the future, I want to contribute to a better understanding of the social fabric of our societies and its economic implications with a focus on immigrant integration in Europe. I am affiliated with the Immigration Policy Lab at Stanford.
